You're Not Alone

You belong to a group of people who share the way you take action. It's not about what you can or can't do, it's about how you do things when at your best. What works for your group differs from the way other groups get things done. They help you do what's not natural for you — and vice versa.

Kickstart your efforts by

Planning

You're a natural at coming up with the plan other people will follow. You keep projects structured and consistent.

Tips & Tricks

- Organize a space around you and keep others from messing it up.
- Start with an outline but don't hesitate to vary it.
- Be bold. Let people know if you truly don't appreciate surprises.
- Plan for exceptions.
- Don't expect others to use your systems as well as you do.
- When you're frustrated with the world, organize areas of it that you can impact.
- Make your life easier by establishing routines.

Keep the drive alive by

Explaining

You're great at explaining complex information. Size up situations so you aren't either too brief or too detailed. Your ability is to help everyone get on the same page.

Tips & Tricks

- If you don't ask a lot of questions about how something needs to be done, you'll have more leeway on how to do it.
- Do all the listening you need to do before giving opinions.
- While you don't need all the info, be prepared to help others find more facts.
- In both your writing and speaking, your most important points should be in your opening and closing statements.
- When in doubt, start conversations or papers with a question.

Stick with it by

Restoring

What have you got to lose? You can fix it, repair it, and throw it away. This may be a good reason not to worry much about material things.

Tips & Tricks

- Watch for body language to find unspoken guidelines from teachers and others.
- Be of service to others by helping to set up space.
- Use what you have available, but don't promise long-lasting results.
- Decide whether it's worth it to repair equipment when it might be cheaper to replace it.
- Warn others of potential physical danger.

Play to your often hidden strength by

Stabilizing

You stick with what works. You don't waste time re-inventing the wheel...and keep others from going off the rails.

Tips & Tricks

- You'll have less stress if you pick what you know rather than risking the unknown.
- When you have too many deadlines, cut down on making commitments.
- If you are having trouble coming up with a topic, Google words that interest you.
- Stick with tried and true solutions.
- In the midst of lots of change, list what is staying the same.
